Solberg appointed Gogebic County Sheriff

By ZACHARY MARANO
zmarano@yourdailyglobe.com

BESSEMER — Ross Solberg was appointed to be the next Gogebic County sheriff on Wednesday by Prosecutor Nick Jacobs and District Court Judge Anna Talaska, effective Jan. 1. The date of the swearing-in ceremony has not yet been determined.

“(I) want nothing but the best for the sheriff’s office and the citizens of the county,” Solberg said. “I will work hard at maintaining a strong working criminal justice system. I will keep the sheriff’s office up to date with the modern trends in law enforcement and criminal justice reform.”

Solberg is from Wakefield and has 28 years of full-time law enforcement experience for Gogebic County Sheriff’s Office, including the last 11 years as Gogebic County undersheriff. He retired from the Michigan National Guard as a first sergeant with 21 years of experience.

Solberg also earned a bachelor’s degree in criminal justice from Michigan State University and has taught criminal justice at Gogebic Community College in Ironwood for the past 20 years.

Solberg will replace Pete Matonich as Gogebic County Sheriff. Matonich announced his retirement as sheriff on Nov. 12 and will complete his term on Dec. 31. In a letter of recommendation to the appointment committee, Matonich supported the appointment of Solberg and said that he feels there is no one more qualified to serve the office than him.

“The leadership and wisdom that come with working your way up within the sheriff’s office is

Planning Commission approves conditional use permit for flower shop

By CHARITY SMITH
csmith@yourdailyglobe.com

WAKEFIELD — The Wakefield Planning Commission approved a conditional use permit for a resident to run a flower shop in her home at 3507 E. Pierce St. during its regular meeting on Tuesday.

Ashley Radowski spoke with the board about her plans for the businesses and answered questions. She said her plans for the business have changed and she no longer plans to operate a general flower shop with a store front. Instead, she will focus on floral arrangements for weddings and private events.

City manager Robert Brown asked if she would be doing consultations at her home. She said she has in past, but doesn’t believe there would be too many of those, as most of her consultations are done over the phone. “Maybe one every six months,” she said.

The commission approved the conditional use permit under the recommendation of Brown to grant it for one calendar year, with renewal due 60 days prior to its expiration.

The commission was advised by Brown of some recent legislation regarding short term rentals that has passed the state house and is currently at the Senate.

“There has been a lot of movement on state legislation regarding short term rentals or as they are commonly referred to AirBnB’s,” said Brown. “Currently, all municipalities enjoy local control, which basically gives us control of our zoning and the parameters of state law to designate what is allowed in are zones and what is not accordingly. The state house of representatives did pass some legislation that preempts our codes so that it makes our codes invalid. If the senate passes it as well, the city will have no ability to regulate AirBnB’s. I shouldn’t say none. Very little ability to regulate short term rentals.”

Brown said he has reached out to legislators state Rep. Greg Markkanen and state Sen. Ed McBroom. He said Markkanen voted for it originally, but said that he called several municipalities and said that he should not have voted for that. According to Brown, Markkanen has contacted McBroom’s office about the issue. The legislation is currently stalled in the Senate committee. Brown said he has a feeling it is going to just sit there for awhile. Brown said the legislation has been pushed through “heavily” by real estate lobbyists.

“The city has had concerns. It wasn’t that we were against giving Airbnb’s a fair shake, but the pendulum swung completely to the other side where it just prevented us from doing hardly anything,” said Brown.

Montreal to apply for road improvement funding

By ZACHARY MARANO
zmarano@yourdailyglobe.com

MONTREAL, Wis. — The Montreal common council discussed which roads to apply for funding through the Wisconsin Department of Transportation’s Local Road Improvement Plan project at their regular meeting on Tuesday.

Mayor Kelly Traczyk identified Minnesota, Montreal and Oshkosh streets as high priority roads. Traczyk said they have already repaired the majority of Montreal Street, but they can apply for supplemental funding for the sections they have not repaired.

The council also heard Jeff Seamandel from MSA Professional Services, a Baraboo, Wisconsin-based consulting firm, about funding from the Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources through the Private Lead Service Line Replacement Program.

Seamandel said this is a $32 million program that will replace lead service lines on private property at no cost to the homeowners. He said that although there are not any lead service lines in the city, they have some galvanized waterlines that were once downstream of a lead fitting. He said that the majority of the homes in Montreal don’t have these waterlines, but there are 20 to 30 houses on Minnesota Street which have them and would be a candidate for this program.

Traczyk said that the application deadline for the lead service line program is extremely tight, with their application due on Jan. 18, but they will reach to all the homeowners and get their approval to replace their waterlines. She said that they also have to pass a resolution before submitting the application and they will vote on this at the next regular meeting on Jan. 11 at city hall.

Traczyk also said that if funding goes through for the waterline replacement, they could also apply for the pavement of Minnesota Street through the Local Road Improvement Plan. She said that the LRIP funds would cover 90% of the surface, curbs, gutters and sidewalks on the street. She said this would be their best option to get funding for both the waterlines and the roads at the least cost to the city while reducing the liability of the

A RADIO Flyer wagon lies among debris along Moss Creek Avenue Tuesday, in Bowling Green, Ky. When a tornado touched down in Bowling Green in the middle of the night, its violence was centered on a friendly subdivision. Fourteen people died in a few blocks, 11 of them on Moss Creek Avenue. Entire families were lost, between them seven children, two of them infants.

On a single Kentucky street, the tornado killed 7 children

BOWLING GREEN, Ky. (AP) — The little red wagon was strewn upside down on a heap of rubble — a pile of boards and bricks, a mangled blue bicycle, a baby doll.

Behind it, there was little more than a hole in the ground where a house had stood. Across the street, the tidy homes on this cul-de-sac were reduced to mounds of lumber. Clothes hung from the branches of snapped trees. The walls of one house were gone, and the only thing left standing inside was a white Christmas tree.

When a tornado touched down in Bowling Green, Kentucky, in the middle of the night, its violence was centered on this friendly subdivision, where everyone waved at one another and giggling children spent afternoons tooling around on bicycles on the sidewalks. Fourteen people died in a few blocks, 11 of them on a single street, Moss Creek Avenue. Entire families were lost, among them seven children, two of them infants. Neighbors who survived are so stricken with grief they struggle to speak of it. All around them, amid the ruins, is evidence of the kids they used to watch climb off the school bus.

Melinda Allen-Ray has barely slept since early Saturday, when tornado alerts started screaming and she carried her grandchildren into the bathroom as winds whipped her house apart. After just minutes of destruction, there was silence. She went outside and heard her neighbors' screams.

"I heard them — it traumatized me. I think about that each night when I go to sleep, when I do sleep," she said. In her dreams she hears the screaming and wakes up. She wept all weekend.

"I just think about all those babies," she said.

Hers is a diverse community of families from around the world — Bosnia, Myanmar, Nigeria — many of whom fled from violence. For some, this fresh destruction triggers thoughts of the dark days they fled in their homelands, where they hid from bombs and lost whole families.

"We come from war; this reminds us, it touches the memory of that, where we've been and how we came here," said Ganimete Ademi, a 46-year-old grandmother who fled Kosovo in 1999 during the war, in which she lost her uncle and a nephew. Now she looks around her own neighborhood.

"I turn my memory back to 22 years ago," she said.

One of the families that lost many members was from Bosnia. Two brothers lived in homes next door to each other with their families, Ademi said. They were happy and gregarious, holding summertime parties in the yard. From the two brothers' households, one woman died, along with two children and two infants, police said. Their surviving relatives said it's too difficult to speak of it.

Another family here lost six members: three adults, a 16-year-old girl, a 4-year-old boy and another child.

Around the corner, a 77-year-old grandmother was killed. Two others from the neighborhood died of their injuries at the hospital.

"That's hard to think about — you go to bed, and your entire family is gone the next day," said Ronnie Ward, with the Bowling Green Police Department. They usually tell people to get in a bathtub and cover up with a mattress, he said, but that probably would've made little difference here: Some homes were destroyed so completely the tornado ripped all their way through the floor, exposing the earth below.

Now, they comb through what remains, turning over every strip of dry wall and each twisted car to make sure there aren't more victims underneath. It can be horrific work, Ward said, but they try to steady themselves enough because they know it must be done.

"So you go about that task of trying to get this work done, and then you come across a wagon," he said, standing near the Radio Flyer bent and broken on a pile. "And you think, that's associated with a child somewhere. And did that child live? Those thoughts, they overtake you, they overwhelm you."

What these children left consumes them. There's a Barbie doll missing a leg. A reindeer stuffed animal. A scooter, a toy horse, a hula hoop. There's a pink Disney princess backpack. A car from "Paw Patrol," and bedding printed with the faces of its goofy animal first responders.

The people who've had to see it are reckoning with how close they and their own children came. As the tornado tore through the subdivision, it decimated some houses and damaged others, yet left some just next door unscathed.

"It's almost hard to look at, because how did it miss that house but it got this house?" Ward said.

A tree shot through the neighborhood like a missile and landed in Ademi's backyard, about a dozen feet from where she'd cowered with her husband. Her four children and two grandchildren live nearby. "This tree could have come in my house, and we'd all be gone too," she said.

The tornado turned just as it got to Benedict Awm's house. Inside, he, his wife, their 2-year-old son and infant held one another under a blanket to protect their eyes and bodies from the broken glass shooting through shattered windows. His wife shook and asked if they would die. He said he didn't know.

"It's terrible, you can't imagine, I thought we were dead," he said. Had the tornado kept on its course, they would be, he thinks. But instead it turned slightly. Thunderous winds turned to silence, and their house still stood. A miracle, thinks Awm, who moved here from war-torn Burma.

Around the corner, someone spray-painted on their front door the words "By God's grace we survived," and hung an American flag from the wreckage of their rafters.

For days now, volunteers have arrived from all over with trucks and tools, and there's comfort in that.

"Sometimes it makes me want to cry, to see how people are willing to help me," Awm said.

Ben Cerimovic pulled his truck and trailer in every day over the weekend. He's an immigrant from Bosnia, and he knows the family that died here.

"The feelings I'm having right now I really can't explain," he said. There's a close-knit, thriving Bosnian community in Bowling Green, which has a robust refugee resettlement program to bring migrants to Western Kentucky. Most of them came here from war so their children would have a better life, he said. Now this subdivision looks like a war zone, scattered with things their children loved.

Cerimovic volunteered Saturday and Sunday, but he had to take Monday off to gather his emotions.

"Every time I see this, and I hear about those kids, I think about mine," he said. "What if they were my kids?"

NYC weighs cutting off natural gas hookups for new buildings

NEW YORK (AP) — New York City lawmakers are poised to decide Wednesday whether to prohibit most new buildings from using natural gas, a move that would make the nation's most populous city a showcase for a climate-change-fighting policy that has been both embraced and blocked around the country.

The measure is expected to pass the City Council and subsequently receive Mayor Bill de Blasio's signature. If all that happens, most construction projects submitted for approval after 2027 would have to use something other than gas or oil — such as electricity — for heating, hot water and cooking. Some smaller buildings would have to comply as early as 2024, while hospitals, commercial kitchens and some other facilities would be exempt.

Supporters see the proposal as a big and necessary move in a city where heating, cooling and powering buildings accounts for nearly 70% of emissions of carbon dioxide and other heat-trapping gases.

Although stoves and furnaces would use electricity generated partly from burning natural gas and other fossil fuels, backers say the change would boost momentum ahead of a statewide requirement to use 70% renewable energy by 2030, up from about 30% now.

"We can't keep expanding gas if we have any prayer of hitting the state's climate goals," said Alex Beauchamp of Food & Water Watch, an environmental group.

"This is a huge, huge step forward," he said, calling the legislation "a real game-changer on the national scene."

Proponents also say they're fighting air pollution, particularly on behalf of communities of color. Researchers have found that non-white people are exposed to more air pollution than whites across the country.

"We must take steps towards climate justice — which is inextricably tied to racial justice," and the gas legislation "provides an actionable and meaningful answer," Council sponsor Alicka Ampry-Samuel tweeted in September. The Democrat represents an overwhelmingly Black Brooklyn district.

A few dozen other cities, including San Francisco and Seattle, have moved to end gas hookups for heat, hot water and sometimes cooking in at least some new buildings.

At the same time, states including Arizona, Oklahoma and Texas have barred cities from doing so, saying that consumers should have their choice of energy sources. In Texas, the effort began before, but gained all the more steam after, a February storm spawned massive power outages that left many households shivering without electricity, heat or drinkable water for days.

In New York, shifts toward electric vehicles, furnaces and appliances are "expected to create long-term upward pressure" on electricity use.

'Return of Jedi,' 'Selena' added to National Film Registry

LOS ANGELES (AP) – This year's inductees into the National Film Registry include an epic Star Wars and Lord of the Ring films, projects starring Jennifer Lopez and the late Cicely Tyson along with films that took on racially motivated violence against people of color.

The Library of Congress announced Tuesday that films including "Star Wars Episode VI: Return of the Jedi," "The Lord of the Rings: The Fellowship of the Ring," and "A Nightmare on Elm Street" are among the 25 movies tapped for preservation this year. Lopez's starring role in the 1997 biographical film "Selena" and Tyson's "Sounder" in 1972 made the registry as well.

The national library said this year's selections date back nearly 120 years. The oldest was the "Ringling Brothers Parade Film" in 1902.

"Films help reflect our cultural history and creativity – and show us new ways of looking at ourselves – though movies haven't always been deemed worthy of preservation," Carla Hayden, the Librarian of Congress, said in a statement. "The National Film Registry will preserve our cinematic heritage, and we are proud to add 25 more films this year."

Hayden and film historian Jacqueline Stewart will discuss the new selections in a television special on Turner Classic Movies on

Associated Press
MOVIE FANS line up on Philadelphia's Chestnut Street in advance for the premiere of the movie, "Star Wars: Episode VI - Return of the Jedi," on May 23, 1983. The Library of Congress announced Tuesday that the film is among the 25 movies to be inducted into the National Film Registry.

Friday at 8 p.m. EST.

The library has selected movies for preservation because of their cultural, historic and artist importance since the registry began in 1988. This year's picks bring the total number of films in the registry to 825.

"Return of the Jedi" and "The Fellowship of the Ring" drew significant public support through online nominations.

"It is a great honor to have 'The Lord of the Rings: The Fellowship of the Ring' selected this year by the National Film Registry," said Peter Jackson's filmmaking team, which includes Fran Walsh and Philippa Boyens. "We are proud to be part of an archive that celebrates and preserves the art of visual storytelling, for generations to come."

Two animated features made registry including Pixar's Oscar-winning film from 2008 "WALL-E" and Disney's "Flowers and Trees" released in 1932.

Several films on list that address racially motivated violence includes "The Murder of Fred Hampton," "Who Killed Vincent Chin?" and "Requiem-29."

The library chose a few more memorable titles such as "Cooley High," "Richard Pryor: Live in Concert," "Chicana," "The Long Goodbye," "The Watermelon Woman," "Stop Making Sense" and "Strangers on a Train."

Additional films on the list include "The Wobblies," "Pink Flamingos," "Evergreen," "What Ever Happened to Baby Jane," "Hellbound Train," "The Flying Ace" and "Jubilo."

'Facts of Life,' 'Different Strokes' remakes are ABC's top shows of week

NEW YORK (AP) – Everything old is new again – at least for ABC's audience.

The network's special, star-filled live presentations of old episodes of "The Facts of Life" and "Different Strokes" reached some 4.8 million viewers last week, the Nielsen company said.

That wasn't earth-shattering, and didn't even crack Nielsen's list of top 30 programs. But it was the network's most-watched program. With stars like Jennifer Aniston, Kevin Hart, John Lithgow, Jon Stewart and Snoop Dogg, the annual exercise hosted by Jimmy Kimmel got some good word-of-mouth.

Otherwise, it was a fairly typical week in television, with football dominating and CBS' "60 Minutes" the top non-sports broadcast.

CBS eked out a weekly win, averaging 5.94 million viewers in prime time to NBC's 5.89 million. Fox averaged 4.5 million, ABC had 2.8 million, Univision had 1.5 million, Telemundo had 1 million and Ion Television had 880,000.

ESPN was the top cable network in prime time, averaging 2.49 million viewers. Fox News Channel had 2.3 million, Hallmark had 1.57 million, MSNBC had 1.12 million and Paramount had 894,000.

ABC's "World News Tonight" won the evening news ratings race, averaging 8 million viewers. NBC's "Nightly News" had 7.4 million viewers and the "CBS Evening News" had 5.2 million.

For the week of Dec. 6-12, the top 20 prime time telecasts, their networks and viewers included:

1. NFL Football: Chicago at Green Bay, NBC, 18.56 million.
2. NFL Football: Pittsburgh at Minnesota, Fox, 14.04 million.
3. NFL Football: New England at Buffalo, ESPN, 13.28 million.
4. "NFL Pregame," NBC, 12.48 million.
5. "NFL Postgame," Fox, 10.93 million.

6. "60 Minutes," CBS, 9.32 million.

Happy 100th, Bloody Mary: Paris marks cocktail's birthday

PARIS (AP) – Harry's Bar in Paris is celebrating the 100th birthday of the Bloody Mary, the vodka-tomato juice cocktail believed to have been invented in the iconic watering hole in 1921.

The centenary events this week bring a welcome respite from winter gloom and spreading worries about the omicron coronavirus variant.

The bar is carefully checking COVID-19 health passes as visitors from Australia, Egypt and beyond gather to sample the famed drink at Harry's, whose patrons over the past century have included writers Ernest Hemingway and F. Scott Fitzgerald.

Franz-Arthur MacElhone, great-grandson of bar founder Harry MacElhone, recounted different legends around the reason for the drink's name. According to Harry's Bar history, bartender Fernand Petiot invented the drink and the recipe was first published in a book called "Harry's ABC of Cocktails" in 1921.

Bartender Dante Agnelli demonstrated the technique for making the drink, ingredient by ingredient: Salt and pepper, Tabasco sauce, Worcestershire sauce, lemon juice, and vodka, tomato juice.

Bipartisan support for investigating UFOs

A few years ago, it would have drawn jokes and scorn. But given the continuing mystery over what, exactly, U.S. military pilots are seeing in the skies, a congressional proposal to create an “Anomaly Surveillance and Resolution Office” — an office to investigate what used to be called UFOs — makes sense.

This is no laughing matter. In 2017, The New York Times reported that the U.S. military was gathering data from pilots who had reported unexplained encounters during their flights. Recently released video of some of those encounters defies conventional explanation — objects moving at speeds and in ways that don’t conform with current aviation technological capabilities. And unlike most of the wack-a-doodle stuff from UFO culture, the Pentagon confirms those videos are real.

It’s not to say these are little green men. This could be Russian or Chinese or North Korean technology being taken out for a test-drive under the noses of American military pilots to gauge U.S. reaction. Among the most startling aspects of the Pentagon’s recent new openness on this topic is its acknowledgment that this isn’t one or two or a half-dozen unexplained encounters. It’s happening with relative frequency, often in restricted airspace.

The abbreviation UFO — unidentified flying object — was a military creation from the 1950s but has since then been so thoroughly commandeered by pop culture that the military has ditched it and now uses a new abbreviation: UAP, for “unidentified aerial phenomena.” (No doubt it’ll appear in the title of a Steven Spielberg film some time soon.)

The Pentagon this summer issued a report on UAP sightings that raised more questions than it answered. It found no solid evidence that the still-unexplained sightings were from global adversaries or ... something else ... but it encouraged political leaders to begin taking the issue more seriously than they traditionally have.

Not so long ago, it would have sounded like science fiction, but today it makes perfect sense that Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand, D-N.Y., is proposing creation of the Anomaly Surveillance and Resolution Office, dedicated to investigating these sightings as they occur. Gillibrand has introduced an amendment to the National Defense Authorization Act establishing the office.

“If it is technology possessed by adversaries or any other entity, we need to know. ... Burying our heads in the sand is neither a strategy nor an acceptable approach,” Gillibrand told Politico last month. “I can count on one hand the number of hearings I had in 10 years on this topic. That’s fairly concerning given the experience our service members have had over the last decade.”

The idea has wide bipartisan support — a rarity these days, and an indication of how seriously this once-snicker-inducing topic is now being taken in Washington. For once, Washington is right.

True cost of Biden’s agenda

President Joe Biden and Capitol Hill Democrats are racing to pass their massive social spending bill, known as Build Back Better, before Christmas. Maybe they’ll succeed, and maybe they won’t — a lot depends on whether Democratic Sen. Joe Manchin hops on board. But no one should have any illusions about what BBB, the final piece in the Democrats’ COVID-year spending orgy, costs. After a lot of deceptive claims from Democrats, we finally have an answer.

Biden has claimed, falsely, that the bill is “fully paid for.” But last month, the Congressional Budget Office released an analysis saying BBB would add $367 billion to the deficit over the next 10 years. So much for “fully paid for.”

But it’s much, much worse than that. According to a new assessment from the CBO, the cost of the bill under real-world conditions — that is, if it is ultimately extended for a decade, the way Democrats want — will add not $367 billion to the deficit but $3 trillion. That’s more than eight times the deficit spending Democrats are citing.

Here’s how it works: In order to keep the costs of the bill down, Democrats have inserted a lot of “sunsets” in it — that is, arbitrary dates at which provisions would end. For example, the centerpiece of Build Back Better is the child tax credit, a program under which the government sends monthly checks to families with children, with no requirement that recipients work, or look for work, or anything. It is a new dole, and it has long been a goal of some Democratic policymakers. Democrats want to make it a permanent feature of American life.

This year, passing the enormous COVID relief bill, Democrats inserted the child tax credit — but only for a year. Now, there was no way in the world that Democrats believed the country should have a child tax credit for just one year. No, the idea was to pass the bill, get the policy into law, and then renew it year after year. After all, what heartless lawmaker would want to take sustenance and support from children? At this moment, the child tax credit is scheduled to expire on Dec. 31, and Democrats are working frantically to extend it. “It’s as important a thing as there is in the Build Back Better bill, and to me it was the most important thing we did in calendar 2021,” Democratic Sen. Sherrod Brown said recently.

BBB would extend the child tax credit, but only for one more year, until the end of 2022. As a “temporary” measure, the CBO said it would add $185 billion to the deficit. Estimating its cost for just one year keeps the stated overall cost of the bill down. But guess what will happen at the end of 2022? Democrats will say it is absolutely necessary that the child tax credit be extended. And the cost will go up.

So Republican Sen. Lindsey Graham and Rep. Jason Smith recently asked the CBO: What would provisions of the bill add to the deficit if they were extended for 10 years, as Democrats originally intended and hope to make a reality? For the child tax credit, the added deficit goes from $185 billion to $1.597 trillion — a huge increase. That’s the real cost of just one part of the Build Back Better bill.

Graham and Smith asked about other provisions as well. Democrats say child care and preschool subsidies would add $381 billion to the deficit, ending after 2027. But they will actually add $752 billion to the deficit if extended a full decade, as Democrats intend. Democrats say health insurance subsidies will add $74 billion to the deficit, ending after 2025. But they will actually add $220 billion to the deficit for the decade. Increasing the earned income tax credit would add $13 billion to the deficit, ending in 2022. But it would actually add $135 billion to the deficit for the decade, as Democrats intend.

You can see what is going on. Using their bare majority in the House and their not-really-a-majority in the Senate, Democrats hope to pass a massive spending bill that is actually far more massive than it looks. The estimated $367 addition to the deficit — which is bad enough — would actually be a $3 trillion addition to the deficit. Whenever you see Democrats estimate the cost of Build Back Better, multiply it by eight or 10, and you’ll be getting close.

very beneficial as we are unlike any law enforcement agency. As sheriff, Ross will understand the details of running a sheriff's office. With his tenure as both a deputy and then undersheriff, Ross will bring continued confidence from our citizens, partnerships with our courts and other area law enforcement agencies," Matonich said.

The appointment committee of Jacobs, Talaska and County Clerk Ramona Collins interviewed Solberg before appointing him sheriff. They scheduled a review of all applications for Wednesday, but Solberg was the only one to apply for the position.

During the interview, Talaska noted that the sheriff's office has hired several new deputies over the last two years and that it is sometimes difficult to find applicants. She asked Solberg is he had any ideas on how to keep their employees and find more as the office continues to grow.

Solberg said recruitment has become more difficult because of negative views on law enforcement right now. For example, he said that his law enforcement class at Gogebic Community College has only six students and only one of them is going into the police academy. Four or five years ago, his class had 20 students. He said that the prison closure in Marenisco also decreased the number of students in his class.

However, Solberg said that the Gogebic County deputies are paid well compared to other counties and that helps with retention. He said that other counties throughout the U.P. are offering bonuses and help paying college tuition to job candidates. Solberg said they may have to consider doing this themselves to remain competitive with other counties.

Jacobs asked Solberg if he was satisfied with the sheriff office's general fund budget of $1.8 million and Solberg said that he was. Furthermore, Solberg said that although it was not one of his primary roles as undersheriff, he worked with Matonich in developing and managing annual budgets, grants and paying bills.

"We've been able to maintain that budget and stay within that budget for the 11 years I've been undersheriff and I plan on working closely with (County Administrator Juliane Giackino) to make sure that I understand where she's coming from. I think there's a ledger class coming up. Obviously, there's always a need to increase every year with the way things are, but the budget has been working pretty good for us," Solberg said.

Solberg's appointment will leave the position of undersheriff open. Solberg said that he plans to promote his undersheriff from within the sheriff's office.

The council also approved a motion to include a water filtration system for wells no. 3 and 5 as part of their capital improvement plan. Traczyk said that the DNR and various agencies strongly recommended getting a filtration system for treating the high levels of manganese and total organic carbon in their water system.

Seamandel said that the city of Montreal could apply for a community development block grant for the water filtration system. Although Montreal itself is above the income level for the grant, he said they could still apply for it because they sell their water to other communities including the city of Hurley and the towns of Kimball and Pence.

Traczyk said that they should set a date for a planning committee meeting to set a five-year local roads and capital improvement plan, which she said was key to securing long-term funding down the line. The council agreed to hold the meeting on Jan. 4 at 5:30 p.m. at Montreal City Hall.

The council also approved:

—A website upgrade that will change their domain name from montrealwis.com to montrealwis.gov and include .gov in council members' email addresses.

—The purchase of new office equipment including new computers, software and accounting programs.

—The purchase of outerwear gear for public works department employees including boots, jackets, hats and gloves.

According to Brown the Michigan Municipal League has been lobbying on behalf of all municipalities to find a common ground compromise. "We can allow them in all our districts, but we want to be able to regulate them in all our districts," said Brown.

He said that right now, the city does not have regulations on the Airbnb's. However once the International Property Maintenance Code is adopted, the city will have the tools to do so. The commission approved the draft of the International Property Maintenance Code during the meeting. The first reading of the code is scheduled for the commission's January meeting.

The commission also:

—Tabled approval of an ordinance to limit the number of dogs a resident can own, so that new member Deion Del Favero can have time to review the issue.

Freelance journalist accredited to AP detained in Ethiopia

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — A freelance video journalist accredited to The Associated Press in Ethiopia has been detained by police in the capital, Addis Ababa, the news organization said Wednesday.

Amir Aman Kiyaro was detained under the country's new war-related state of emergency powers on Nov. 28 after returning home from a reporting trip. He has not been charged.

Officials with the Ethiopian Media Authority, the prime minister's office, the foreign ministry and other government offices have not responded to repeated requests from the AP for information about him since his detention. State media on Wednesday reported his detention, citing federal police, and said he was accused of "serving the purposes" of a terrorist group by interviewing it. The report said local journalists Thomas Engida and Addisu Muluneh also were detained.

Federal police inspector Tesfaye Olani told state media that the journalists violated the state of emergency law and Ethiopia's anti-terrorism law and the violations could lead to seven to 15 years behind bars.

In a statement, AP's Executive Editor Julie Pace urged that Kiyaro be freed: "The Associated Press is extremely concerned that AP freelancer Amir Aman Kiyaro has been detained by the Ethiopian government, accused of promoting terrorism. These are baseless allegations. Kiyaro is an independent journalist who has done important work in Ethiopia on all sides of the conflict. We call on the Ethiopian government to release Kiyaro immediately."

Ethiopia's government in November declared a state of emergency, which includes sweeping powers of detention, after a year of war as rival forces from the country's northern Tigray region in collaboration with the Oromo Liberation Army moved closer to the capital. The government this year declared both the Tigray forces and the OLA as terrorist groups.

Tens of thousands of people have been killed in the war that erupted in November 2020. The Tigray forces say they are pressuring the government to lift a deadly blockade on their region but also want Prime Minister Abiy Ahmed to step aside. Mediation efforts by the United States and African Union for a cease-fire have made little progress.

Kiyaro has covered both sides of the war this year for the AP, including groundbreaking reporting on the alleged mass killings by Tigray forces in the community of Chenna Teklehaymanot after the fighters in recent months moved into Ethiopia's neighboring Amhara region.

In late November, the country's state of emergency command sought to restrict media reporting on the war, forbidding the sharing of non-official information on "military-related movements, battlefield results and situations." Foreign media have been barred from Tigray for much of the war, with communications links severed.

The government-created Ethiopian Human Rights Commission on Wednesday said it was monitoring the situation of four other local journalists detained in recent weeks. Last month, it said it was alarmed by the conditions of the detentions of perhaps thousands of people who have been swept up under the state of emergency. It urged authorities to immediately release people detained without "evidence establishing reasonable grounds for suspicion."

Spokesmen for the commission did not immediately respond to a request for comment on Kiyaro.

"Ethiopia has again become one of the worst jailers of journalists in sub-Saharan Africa," the Committee to Protect Journalists said in a statement last week, describing the media environment as "hostile" three years after the prime minister took office and his government freed journalists as part of sweeping political reforms that have since been eroded.

$100,000 grant will support mental health services in Oxford

LANSING (AP) — A nonprofit in Oakland County that provides mental health crisis services will receive $100,000 in state funding following the mass shooting at Oxford High School.

The aid for Common Ground was included in an $841 million supplemental spending bill that won legislative approval Tuesday night and will be signed by Gov. Gretchen Whitmer.

The grant is intended to support mental health services for students, educators, parents and first responders in the Oxford High School community.

Common Ground offers 24-hour services to more than 80,000 people each year, according to Sen. Ruth Johnson. Those who need immediate counseling can also call the Disaster Distress Helpline at 800-985-5990.

A dozen elk fall through ice and die in Otsego County dozen elk fell through ice in northern Michigan and died, despite a desperate rescue effort by hunting guides, authorities said.

"This is a very tragic and unfortunate event," said Dan Eichinger, director of the Department of Natural Resources.

The elk, a group of bulls, females and calves, died Tuesday at Crapo Lake, a private lake in Otsego County, about 20 miles northeast of Grayling.

A hunting party saw the elk heading down a slope and onto the ice. Two hunting guides in a rowboat tried to cut a path through the ice with a chainsaw but didn't make much progress, the DNR said.

"For the safety of the guides, conservation officers ordered them off the ice to prevent another tragedy," said Sgt. Mark Dewep of the DNR. "Given the weight of the animals and the relatively thin ice, there were no safe options available for saving or recovering the elk alive."

The ice was only 2 inches thick where the elk fell through. Elk can weigh 350 to 900 pounds.

News groups argue for more access

DETROIT (AP) — The Michigan Supreme Court heard arguments Wednesday in a challenge to whether a new state commission creating maps for the Legislature and Congress can keep certain business a secret.

News organizations are suing to get access to a recording of a closed meeting and some memos at the Michigan Independent Citizens Redistricting Commission. The commission has refused, citing attorney-client privilege.

Voters in 2018 created the commission through an amendment to the state constitution, taking the job of mapmaking out of the hands of politicians. More than 130 hearings have been open to the public.

On Oct. 27, the commission met privately for 75 minutes after receiving public feedback about draft maps. The memos at issue involved federal voting law and the impact of discrimination on elections.

“Trying to figure out how to draw the lines around” attorney-client privilege “feels very tricky and a job I wish the constitution had given to someone besides us,” Chief Justice Bridget McCormack said.

Attorney Kurtis Wilder, arguing on behalf of news organizations, said the task of making maps was radically changed by voters.

“What used to be done in secret the public wanted done in the open,” he said.

An attorney for the commission, David Fink, said data and materials used in creating maps must be made public. He argued that the memos withheld from the public don't fit.

“For this court to micromanage what the commission does on a day-to-day basis seems to be outside the realm of practical experience and constitutional intent,” Fink told the Supreme Court.

The court heard arguments a day after the House gave final approval to a bill that would prohibit the commission from using exceptions in Michigan's open meetings law to hold closed sessions. It now goes to Gov. Gretchen Whitmer.

The commission will meet Dec. 28 to vote on final maps. There are four U.S. House options, three state House options and three state Senate options that were collaboratively drawn.

Driver cited after running over groceries

BLAINE, Minn. (AP) — A Minnesota grocery delivery driver accused of running over bags of food she had dropped off in a Twin Cities suburb because she didn't like the homeowners' pro-police yard sign has been cited for criminal damage to property, authorities said.

The incident happened Dec. 6 after the elderly couple ordered $50 worth of groceries from Cub Foods to be delivered by Instacart to their home in Blaine. Police said the couple stepped out to meet the driver, who first told them to check the wreath hanging on their front door and then drove back and forth over the groceries.

The driver allegedly scribbled a note on the receipt that complained about the delivery service pay and called police “racist pigs.” Investigators said the sign supporting law enforcement was in the front yard of the home.

Blaine police have identified the driver as a 36-year-old woman from the nearby suburb of Coon Rapids.

The couple received a full refund from Instacart, which said it fired the delivery driver.

Police said they have received inquiries about whether the case could be charged as a hate crime, but because the crime was allegedly committed due to the couple's support for police it doesn't qualify.

Sonic blasts used to scare geese away

SIoux FALLS, S.D. (AP) — Sioux Falls will use pyrotechnics and sound cannons to scare Canada geese that are migrating into the city as temperatures drop and ponds freeze in rural areas.

City officials say the geese are creating a safety hazard for airplanes near the Sioux Falls Regional Airport. The geese can strike a plane's windshield or get sucked into its engines.

Omicron to be dominant variant in EU by mid-January

BRUSSELS (AP) — Omicron is expected to be the dominant coronavirus variant in the European Union's 27 nations by mid-January, the bloc's top official said Wednesday amid concerns that a dramatic rise in infections will leave Europe shrouded in gloom during the holiday season.

European Commission President Ursula von der Leyen said the EU is well prepared to fight omicron with 66.6% of its population fully vaccinated. She expressed disappointment that the pandemic will again disrupt year-end celebrations but said she was confident the EU has the “strength” and “means” to overcome COVID-19.

“Like many of you, I'm sad that once again this Christmas will be overshadowed by the pandemic,” she said.

The EU-wide vaccination rate obscures that some EU nations, like Portugal and Spain, have immunized the vast majority of their people while other countries lag way behind. Bulgaria, for example, has just 26.6% of its population fully vaccinated, according to the European Centre for Disease Prevention and Control.

Continental Europe can look at Britain for a sense of what lies ahead as omicron spreads; U.K. officials say it will be the country's dominant variant within days. The head of the U.K. Health Security Agency, Dr. Jenny Harries, said omicron is displaying a staggering growth rate compared to previous variants.

“The difficulty is that the growth of this virus, it has a doubling time which is shortening, i.e. it's doubling faster, growing faster,” Harries told a parliamentary committee on Wednesday. “In most regions in the U.K., it is now under two days. When it started, we were estimating about four or five.”

Harries said the variant poses “probably the most significant threat we've had since the start of the pandemic.”

Britain on Wednesday recorded 78,610 new infections, its highest confirmed daily total of the pandemic. But deaths remained far lower than during the country's previous peaks, before vaccines against the coronavirus were widely deployed. Scientists have said they don't know yet if omicron is as lethal as other virus variants.

Alarming rises in infections as winter approached and the delta variant remained at large prompted many European governments to implement public health measures as excess mortality increased during the fall.

The head of the World Health Organization says 77 countries have reported cases of omicron but the variant is probably in most countries by now, just not yet detected. WHO says data is still coming in and much remains unknown about the new variant.

According to an analysis Tuesday of data from South Africa, where omicron is driving a surge in infections, the variant seems to be more easily spread from person to person and better at evading vaccines while causing less serious illness.

“Omicron is spreading at a rate we have not seen with any previous variant. We are concerned that people are dismissing omicron as mild,” WHO Director-General Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus said. “Surely we have learned by now that we underestimate this virus at our peril.”

Tedros emphasized that vaccines were just one tool

— if a major one — to fight the pandemic, along with measures like mask-wearing, better indoor ventilation, social distancing and hand washing.

With omicron now on the scene, more countries are adopting restrictions. Italy this week required negative tests from vaccinated visitors, raising concerns that similar moves elsewhere will limit the ability of EU citizens to travel to see friends and relatives over the holidays.

Portugal adopted a similar measure on Dec. 1, requiring a mandatory negative test for all passengers on arriving flights, regardless of their vaccination status, point of origin or nationality.

Greece announced Wednesday that all arriving travelers must display a negative test starting Sunday unless they have spent less than 48 hours abroad.

Von der Leyen said the EU faces a double challenge, with a massive increase of cases in recent weeks due to the delta variant combined with the rise of omicron.

“We're seeing an increasing number of people falling ill, a greater burden on hospitals and unfortunately, an increase in the number of deaths,” she told European Parliament lawmakers.

Von der Leyen insisted that the increase in infections in Europe right now remains due “almost exclusively” to the delta variant. She said that fighting vaccine skepticism is key, especially in EU nations with lower vaccination rates.

“Because the price that we will pay if people are not vaccinated continues to increase,” she said. “It's also a problem for our elderly citizens, who once again this Christmas can't see their grandchildren. And it's also a problem for those children who once again can't go to school. What kind of a life is that?”

Echoing von der Leyen's comments, German Chancellor Olaf Scholz vowed Wednesday that his new government would do everything for Germany to overcome the coronavirus pandemic and let people return to normal lives.

“We have no time to waste,” said Scholz, who took office as Germany grapples with its biggest wave of infections during the pandemic to date.

Scholz also said his German government won't tolerate a “tiny minority” of extremists trying to impose their will against coronavirus policies.

As governments braced for the holiday season, Greece, Italy, Spain and Hungary began vaccinating children aged 5-11 against COVID-19.

EU leaders have a summit scheduled for Thursday in Brussels.

House votes to hold Mark Meadows in contempt in Jan. 6 probe

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House has voted to hold former White House chief of staff Mark Meadows in contempt of Congress after he ceased to cooperate with the Jan. 6 Committee investigating the Capitol insurrection — making it the first time the chamber has voted to hold a former member in contempt since the 1830s.

The near-party-line 222-208 vote Tuesday is the second time the special committee has sought to punish a witness for defying a subpoena. The vote is the latest show of force by the Jan. 6 panel, which is leaving no angle unexplored — and no subpoena unanswered — as it investigates the worst attack on the Capitol in more than 200 years. Lawmakers on the panel are determined to get answers quickly, and in doing so reassert the congressional authority that eroded while former President Donald Trump was in office.

“History will be written about these times, about the work this committee has undertaken,” said Rep. Bennie Thompson, R-Miss., the chairman. “And history will not look upon any of you as a martyr. History will not look upon you as a victim.”

The two GOP votes — Reps. Liz Cheney of Wyoming and Adam Kinzinger of Illinois, who serve on the committee — in favor of the resolution came after nine Republicans voted to hold former Trump ally Steve Bannon in contempt in October. While Bannon's case was more clear-cut — he never engaged with the committee at all — Meadows had turned over documents and negotiated for two months with the panel about an interview. Meadows also has closer relationships within the Republican caucus, having just left Congress last year.

Meadows was also Trump's top aide in the White House, giving him more plausible grounds to claim executive privilege. Bannon had not worked in the White House since 2017.

The Justice Department will also be weighing those factors as prosecutors decide whether to move forward with the case. If convicted, Bannon and Meadows could each face up to one year behind bars on each charge.

Rep. Jamie Raskin, D-Md., another member of the panel, began Tuesday's debate on the resolution by reading frantic texts from the day of the attack revealing members of Congress, Fox News anchors and even Trump's son urging Meadows to persuade the outgoing president to act quickly to stop the three-hour assault by his supporters.

Republicans on Tuesday called the action against Meadows a distraction from the House's work, with one member calling it “evil” and “un-American.”

Rep. Jim Jordan of Ohio praised Meadows: “Make no mistake, when Democrats vote in favor of this resolution, it is a vote to put a good man in prison.”

Trump also defended Meadows in an interview, saying: “I think Mark should do what's right. He's an honorable man. He shouldn't be put through this.”

Colleges go back to drawing board to fight virus

By COLLIN BINKLEY
AP Education Writer

Facing rising infections and a new COVID-19 variant, colleges across the U.S. have once again been thwarted in seeking a move to normalcy and are starting to require booster shots, extend mask mandates, limit social gatherings and, in some cases, revert to online classes.

The threat of the omicron variant comes as a gut punch to schools that were hoping to relax safety measures this spring. Now, many are telling students to prepare for another term of masking, testing and, if cases get bad, limits around social life.

After a fall with few coronavirus cases, officials at Syracuse University were “feeling pretty good” about the spring term, said Kent Syverud, the upstate New York school’s chancellor.

“But omicron has changed that,” Syverud said. “It has made us go back and say, until we know more about this variant for sure, we’re going to have to reinstate some precautions.”

Last week, Syracuse announced that all eligible students and employees must get COVID-19 booster shots before the spring term. Students will also face a round of virus tests when they return, and officials are weighing whether to extend an existing mask mandate.

Much is still unknown about the omicron variant and how big of a threat it poses. In the United States and many other nations, the delta variant is currently responsible for most COVID-19 cases.

But as colleges brace for the worst, many see boosters as their best hope. More than 20 colleges have issued booster shot requirements in recent weeks, and others say they’re thinking about it. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention is encouraging boosters for people ages 17 and older, and Pfizer last week announced that a booster of its COVID-19 vaccine might offer important protection against omicron even though the initial two doses appear less effective.

Hundreds of colleges already require COVID-19 vaccines, and some say boosters are an obvious next step.

Most booster mandates so far have come from small liberal arts colleges in the Northeast, but the list includes some as big as Boston University and as far away as the University of Notre Dame in Indiana and the University of New Mexico.

The University of Massachusetts in Amherst was among the first to require the booster for students, saying all students must get shots unless they have medical or religious exemptions.

“The boosters are our best protection,” said Jeffrey Hescoek, co-director of the university’s Public Health Promotion Center. “This demonstrates that we take public health seriously, and our students do too.”

A recent online petition arguing against the booster mandate — citing 97% of students vaccinated and few on-campus cases — has attracted a few dozen signatures. But Emily O’Brien, a freshman at UMass, said the booster shot is a reasonable demand. She was already planning on getting a booster but said the mandate will probably increase uptake among students and prevent future lockdowns.

“If the past six months have shown anything, it’s that lots of people won’t bother to get vaccines — especially younger healthy people — if they don’t have a requirement to,” said O’Brien, 18, of Bedford, New Hampshire.

UMass will also require masks at the start of spring term, and it’s sending students home with a rapid test to be taken near the end of winter break.

Many colleges planning for potential disruption next semester are already contending with campus outbreaks that have arisen in the weeks after Thanksgiving.

Cornell University shut down all campus activities on Tuesday and moved final exams online after more than 400 students tested positive over two days. In a campus message, President Martha Pollack said there was evidence of the omicron variant in a “significant” number of samples. “It is obviously extremely dispiriting to have to take these steps,” Pollack wrote. “However, since the start of the pandemic, our commitment has been to follow the science and do all we can to protect the health of our faculty, staff and students.”

Hours after the Cornell announcement, Princeton University moved its exams online and urged students to leave campus “at their earliest convenience” amid a rise in cases. The school also announced that boosters will be required for students, faculty and staff.

Middlebury College in Vermont switched to remote instruction last week amid a surge in cases and urged students to leave early for winter break. Rising cases at the University of Pennsylvania led to a ban on indoor social events last Thursday.

On Friday, Tulane University

in New Orleans warned that a campus spike includes “probable” cases of the omicron variant, confirmed in at least one student last week. In response, school officials reinstated a mask mandate and expanded virus testing.

Other colleges that have extended mask requirements into next year include Wake Forest University, West Virginia University and Penn State.

Some other schools are already postponing the return to campus next month to avoid outbreaks. Southern New Hampshire University and DePaul University in Chicago recently said students will take classes remotely for two weeks before returning to campus after the holidays.

In a letter to students, DePaul’s president, A. Gabriel Esteban, said the school will “cautiously start winter quarter so we can sustain a robust college experience the remainder of the academic year.”

When students at Stanford University return to campus in January, they will be barred from holding parties or other big gatherings for two weeks. They’ll also be tested once a week and continue to wear masks indoors as requirements to attend in-person classes.

The measures aim to limit virus transmission without going too far in limiting the college experience, said Russell Furr, associate vice provost for environmental health and safety.

“This is something we’ve grappled with throughout the pandemic — how do we get a balanced approach?” Furr said. The goal is to avoid the strict lockdowns seen early in the pandemic, when student mental health “really suffered,” he added.

At some colleges, there’s still cautious hope for a normal semester. Leaders at the University of Central Florida told professors they can require in-person attendance in the spring, which had been discouraged this fall amid a surge in delta cases.

In a campus message, interim provost Michael D. Johnson warned that if the omicron variant takes off, “we may need to change direction yet again.”

Another concern is omicron’s timing — even without a new variant, there were worries of more outbreaks as colder weather drives people indoors, said Anita Barkin, co-chair of a COVID-19 task force for the American College Health Association.

The association recently recommended that colleges focus on increasing vaccination rates to avoid a new wave of cases.

“The message in all of it is, we need to remain vigilant,” Barkin said. “There is certainly pandemic fatigue and people are tired of the pandemic — but it appears that the pandemic is not quite tired of us.”

Chauvin pleads guilty to federal charges in Floyd’s death

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — Former Minneapolis police Officer Derek Chauvin pleaded guilty Wednesday to federal charges of violating George Floyd’s civil rights, averting a trial but likely extending the time he is already spending behind bars on a state conviction.

Chauvin, who is white, was convicted this spring of state murder and manslaughter charges for pinning his knee against Floyd’s neck during a May 25, 2020, arrest as the Black man said he couldn’t breathe. Chauvin was sentenced to 22 1/2 years in that case.

The federal charges included two counts alleging that Chauvin deprived Floyd of his rights by kneeling on his neck as he was handcuffed and not resisting, and then failing to provide medical care.

Chauvin appeared in person Wednesday for the change of plea hearing in an orange short-sleeve prison shirt. He said “Guilty, your honor” to confirm his pleas.

Federal prosecutors recommended up to 300 months, or 25 years, in prison. A judge will determine his sentence later, but a 25-year federal sentence would likely extend Chauvin’s time behind bars by about six years if he earns credit for good behavior.

Judge Paul Magnuson didn’t set a date for sentencing.

Three other former officers — Thomas Lane, J. Kueng and Tou Thao — were indicted on federal charges alongside Chauvin earlier this year. They are still on course for trial early next year on those charges, with a state trial still to come.

Floyd’s arrest and death, which a bystander captured on cellphone video, sparked mass protests nationwide calling for an end to racial inequality and police mistreatment of Black people.

In Minnesota, defendants with good behavior serve two-thirds of their sentence in prison, and the remaining one-third on supervised release, also known as parole. Under that formula, he’s expected to serve 15 years in prison on the state charges, and 7 1/2 years on parole.

Under sentencing guidelines,

Chauvin could get a federal penalty ranging from 27 years to more than 33 years in prison, with credit for taking responsibility, said Mark Osler, a professor at the University of St. Thomas School of Law. But the guidelines are not mandatory, and Osler estimated Chauvin would be sentenced toward the lower end of the range.

As part of the plea deal, Chauvin also pleaded guilty to violating the rights of a then-14-year-old boy during a 2017 arrest in which he held the boy by the throat, hit him in the head with a flashlight and held his knee on the boy’s neck and upper back while he was prone, handcuffed and not resisting.

Floyd’s arrest and death, which a bystander captured on cellphone video, sparked mass protests nationwide that called for an end to racial inequality and police mistreatment of Black people.

To bring federal charges in deaths involving police, prosecutors must believe an officer acted under the “color of law,” or government authority, and willfully deprived someone of their constitutional rights. That’s a high legal standard. An accident, bad judgment or simple negligence on the officer’s part isn’t enough to support federal charges. Prosecutors have to prove the officer knew what he was doing was wrong at that moment but did it anyway.

According to evidence in the state case against Chauvin, Kueng and Lane helped restrain the 46-year-old Floyd as he was on the ground — Kueng knelt on Floyd’s back and Lane held down bystanders and kept them from intervening during the 9 1/2-minute restraint.

All four former officers were charged broadly in federal court with depriving Floyd of his rights while acting under government authority, but the federal indictment broke down the counts even further. The first count against Chauvin alleges he violated Floyd’s right to be free from unreasonable seizure and unreasonable force by a police officer when he kept his knee on Floyd’s neck, even after Floyd was unresponsive.

The second count alleges Chauvin willfully deprived Floyd of liberty without due process, including the right to be free from “deliberate indifference to his serious medical needs.”

In the 2017 case involving the then-14-year-old boy, Chauvin is charged with depriving the boy, who was handcuffed and not resisting, of his right to be free of unreasonable force when he held him by the throat, hit him in the head with a flashlight and held his knee on the boy’s neck and upper back while he was in a prone position.

According to a police report from that 2017 encounter, Chauvin wrote that the teen resisted arrest and after the teen, whom he described as 6-foot-2 and about 240 pounds, was handcuffed, Chauvin “used body weight to pin” him to the floor. The boy was bleeding from the ear and needed two stitches.

That encounter was one of several mentioned in state court filings that prosecutors said showed Chauvin had used neck or head and upper body restraints seven times before dating back to 2014, including four times state prosecutors said he went too far and held the restraints “beyond the point when such force was needed under the circumstances.”

The other three former officers are still expected to go to trial on federal charges in January, and they face state trial on aiding and abetting counts in March.

Biden sees firsthand tornado toll across Kentucky

MAYFIELD, Ky. (AP) — Surveying storm damage from the Kentucky sky, President Joe Biden on Wednesday saw neighborhoods pockmarked by piles of debris and homes without roofs and windows, evidence of the latest natural disaster in a year that has brought him to devastated communities across the nation to offer support and condolences.

From a helicopter over the town of Mayfield, Biden could observe firsthand the toll from last weekend's deadly tornadoes. More than 30 tornadoes tore through Kentucky and seven other states, killing at least 88 people. Thousands of residents have lost their homes or are without power.

After his aerial tour, the president told local officials at an airport briefing, "I'm here to listen." He pledged that federal aid would continue to flow and described the tornado damage as some of the worst he had ever seen. Biden said this kind of tragedy "either brings people together or it knocks them apart."

"There's no red tornadoes and blue tornadoes," he said.

Michelle Anderson, 68, who took cover in her bathtub with her cat when the tornado ripped the roof off the second floor of her apartment building, hoped to catch Biden in Mayfield.

"I want to see if he's going to help individuals who have been affected by this," she said. "I hope he does."

Joining the president were Homeland Security Secretary Alejandro Mayorkas, federal disaster agency head Deanne Criswell and Gov. Andy Beshear.

While congressional business kept him in Washington during the tour, U.S. Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell leader has spoken about his appreciation for Biden's response to the disaster. U.S. House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., said she is talking to Kentucky lawmakers about what is needed for the state — a nod to a possible disaster relief bill with supplemental funds for recovery.

Jeff and Tara Wilson, a married couple from Mayfield, were at the Graves County Fairgrounds the day before, where food, water and clothing are being passed out. The Wilsons, who said their home was unscathed, were setting up a mobile site for storm victims to receive counseling.

Asked about Biden's visit and the reception he may find in a prominently Republican region, Tara Wilson replied: "Don't know. I think that as long as everybody's hearts are in the right place, we need to not focus on politics right now." She said it was a "very positive thing" that Biden was coming, and she and her husband expressed hope the president might help unite the community.

Across the United States, it's been a year marked by a notable increase in extreme weather occurrences driven primarily by climate change. Only a month after he was sworn into office, Biden went to Houston to survey the damage wrought by a historic storm. He was in Idaho, Colorado and California to survey wildfire damage during the summer. After Hurricane Ida struck, Biden went to Louisiana as well as New Jersey and New York in September.

The disasters have offered Biden evidence of what he says is the pressing need for America to do more to combat climate change and prepare for future disasters — a case he made to help push for passage of his spending proposals.

The $1 trillion infrastructure bill, signed into law last month, includes billions for climate resilience projects aimed to better defend people and property from future storms, wildfires and other natural disasters. His proposed $2 trillion social spending package, still pending in Congress, includes billions more to help shift the nation away from oil, gas and coal and toward widespread clean energy and electric vehicle use.

The White House has spent much of the week engaging with lawmakers on the latter. Biden talked with West Virginia Sen. Joe Manchin, a key Democratic holdout, in hopes of smoothing over some of his issues in time to pass a package before year's end.

Five tornadoes hit Kentucky, including one with an extraordinarily long path of about 200 miles, authorities said.

Besides the deaths in Kentucky, the tornadoes also killed at least six people in Illinois, where the Amazon distribution center in Edwardsville was hit; four in Tennessee; two in Arkansas, where a nursing home was destroyed and the governor said workers shielded residents with their own bodies; and two in Missouri.

Another storm heading into already drenched California

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Another storm pushed into California on Wednesday as the state cleaned up from a powerful weather system that coated mountains with much-needed snow and set rainfall records in the drought-stricken state.

The new storm was expected to impact Northern California with widespread rain, gusty winds and snowfall in coastal mountains and the Sierra Nevada, where the snowpack normally supplies about 30% of the state's water needs.

The latest tempest followed on the heels of a multiday atmospheric river — a long plume of moisture from the Pacific Ocean that delivered remarkable rainfall, including more than 11 inches over 72 hours at Mount Tamalpais, north of San Francisco.

By Tuesday afternoon, 8.1 inches of rain had fallen in one area of the central coast's Santa Barbara County. Downtown Los Angeles got 2.16 inches, more than doubling the date's old record set in 1888.

More than 4.6 inches fell within 24 hours in Orange County's Silverado Canyon, south of LA, where sheriff's deputies rescued residents after mud inundated homes in the area scarred by wildfires. No injuries were reported.

Firefighters searched the surging Los Angeles River on Tuesday after discovering two submerged vehicles wedged against a bridge pillar south of downtown LA and learning that a third vehicle had been swept past the bridge. No victims, if any, were immediately located and firefighters were waiting for the water level to fall.

"The circumstances surrounding these three separate vehicles and their journey down the LA River remain unclear," a Fire Department statement said.

Earlier, a man was rescued after being swept into a covered stream channel in the San Fernando Valley. The man called for help on his cellphone and firefighters reached him through a maintenance hole on the street above. He suffered bruises and hypothermia, fire officials said.

The storm prompted officials to shut down a 40-mile stretch of the iconic Highway 1 in the Big Sur area to repair damage and clean up rocks in lanes. The coastal route south of the San Francisco Bay Area got more than a foot of rain in 24 hours. It frequently experiences damage during wet weather.

The storm began over the weekend in Northern California and brought heavy precipitation as far inland as Nevada, where more than 6 feet of snow fell at the Mt. Rose ski resort just southwest of Reno. Avalanche warnings were in effect in the Mono and Inyo county areas of California's eastern Sierra.

Residents near the Alisal Fire burn scar in Santa Barbara County were ordered to evacuate over concerns that heavy rains might cause flooding and debris flows. The order was lifted Tuesday afternoon.

Similar orders were issued for people living near burn scars in the San Bernardino Mountains east of Los Angeles, where rockslides were reported. A mountain route into the resort town of Big Bear was closed until Wednesday morning while crews cleared several feet of mud and debris.

It was too soon to know how much of a dent the rain would make in the state's drought. The system built on the progress of a massive rain storm in October, particularly in Northern California, said Michael Anderson, the state climatologist. Heavy rains moistened the ground, which will ensure more water stays packed in the snow, he said.

Last year, the mountain snow lost a lot of moisture into the ground because it was so dry, he said.

December, January and February are typically the wettest months of the year in California; about half of the state's annual precipitation falls in that window, he said. If storms don't continue through the winter, the effect of this storm on the drought will be "muted," Anderson said.

A SUBMERGED vehicle is wedged against a bridge pillar in the surging Los Angeles River making it difficult for firefighters to access it on Tuesday. The vehicle was spotted in the river before dawn. Rain is drenching Southern California as a powerful storm slides down the state, snarling traffic and raising the threat of mudslides in areas scarred by wildfires. Associated Press

Devils outlast Speedgirls in overtime

By JASON JUNO
sports@yourdailyglobe.com

BESSEMER — When Ironwood led 21-5 after just one quarter, it certainly looked like it would be an easy win for the Red Devils. But not with this Bessemer team, which forced overtime and proved their team has moved on from the last few years where wins were few and far between.

Ironwood, though, survived the upset bid from their rivals to win 57-50.

“That was a classic overtime game in the House of Noise,” Ironwood coach Jesse Mackey said. “It was nice for both teams to play a game like this. Our girls and their girls battled to the end, and I’m glad we came out on top.”

The Speedgirls didn’t throw in the towel after a poor first quarter and they gave themselves a chance to win at the end of regulation and even in overtime. A very competitive Bessemer coach Joy Smith saw the positives after the game.

“For them to not quit and keep fighting until the last second is huge for our program and them being disappointed as well,” Smith said.

Bessemer led once, when it was 2-0. They trailed by as many as 19, early in the second quarter, before righting the ship. They made it a one-possession game several times in the fourth quarter, but it took until the very end of regulation to come all the way back.

Ironwood freshman Hanna Vaughn, who had a game-high 24 points, calmly hit two big free throws to put the Red Devils ahead 47-43 with 40.8 seconds left.

Bessemer’s Lauren Uribes countered with two of her own to pull the Speedgirls within two.

Ironwood didn’t get the ball to its end of the court the rest of regulation. They turned it over, Bessemer missed a free throw with 18.4 seconds left but maintained possession. Amaya Casiano split at the line to pull them within 47-46 with 6.3 on the clock. Natalie Stone got the offensive rebound on the miss and was fouled on the putback attempt. With gauze in her nose to stop the bleeding from the foul, she made one to tie and force overtime.

The Speedgirls had a chance to take an early lead in overtime, but they missed four consecutive free throws. Ironwood scored first on a bucket by Anna Buerger. Ironwood maintained a one-possession lead and it was 50-48 when Vaughn dropped a 3 from in front of the Ironwood bench to make it 53-48 and finally give Ironwood a chance to breathe with about 25 seconds left.

“That was the dagger in the game and I’m very proud of her for stepping up and making a shot like that,” Mackey said. “She doesn’t play like a freshman, she’s like a veteran player out there.”

Smith was impressed and she too considered it the clincher.

“For her to nail that dagger, that 3 as a freshman like that, it was the dagger,” Smith said. “For her to have ice in her veins, I patted her on the back on the way through.”

Bessemer went 1 of 7 at the line in the overtime period.

“We’ve struggled all year with free throws,” Smith said. “You have to hit those free throws.”

The Devils handled the Bessemer press with ease in the first quarter and even got some easy buckets off of it to take that early 19-point lead.

“We were a lot more poised,” Mackey said. “We were relaxed, we ran the floor well, we played good defense, good help defense. That kind of went away in the second and third. Credit to Bessemer, they played with way more energy than us. I was very impressed with their full-court press tonight.”

Bessemer went away from it in the second quarter with it being ineffective in the first. But they went back to it in the second half with much more success, even though there was no guarantee it would work this time.

“That was a gamble I was willing to take,” Smith said. “I didn’t want to slow it down too much. I know how conditioned my girls are, we’re just going to keep it on them and try to wear them out. ... We just kept sticking with our game plan and took them to overtime, it was very exciting.”

She’s excited for what’s to come the rest of this season as well.

Roundup: Ontonagon sweeps Watersmeet

WATERSMEET — The Ontonagon boys hung on to beat Watersmeet 46-42 in a non-conference game Tuesday night.

The Gladiators led 23-13 at the half, but the Nimrods fought their way back into the game. Watersmeet had a 3 rim out that would have tied the game in the final 10 seconds.

“We were able to fight through a scrappy game and come out on top,” Ontonagon coach Brittany Turin-Jilbert said. “I thought overall we played very well defensively. We did much better at taking away second-chance opportunities. Offensively we struggled shooting more than I would like to see, but I’m hoping as the season continues we can become more consistent.”

Bryce Buzzo led the Gladiators with 19 points and Reece LaBine scored 10.

Tyson Klingman and Brandon Romenesko both had 11 points to lead the Nimrods and Donovan McGeshick had 10.

Ontonagon (1-1) goes to Ewen-Trout Creek Friday night. Watersmeet (1-2) goes to Ironwood Thursday night.

Ontonagon — Bryce Buzzo 19, Reece LaBine 10, Luke Strasser 5, Brandon Betcher 3, Ryan Press 7, Ike Bramlett 2. FTs: 6-13. Fouls: 17. Fouled out: Bramlett. 3-pointers: LaBine 2, Betcher 1.

BAYFIELD, Wis. — The Hurley girls won big, 83-7, in an Indianhead Conference game at Bayfield (0-6, 0-6) Tuesday night.

Melissa DiGiorgio scored 16 points and Olivia France had 12 to lead Hurley and were two of 13 Northstars in the scoring column.

“It was another matchup where we could work on different things offensively and defensively,” Hurley coach Jay Aijala said. “I really liked our half-court defense. We scored a ton off turnovers, which is a big part of our offense. We were very disciplined on offense, limiting ourselves to 12 turnovers for the whole game. This was another game where everyone got a lot of playing time and tried different positions offensively.”

The Northstars shot 60% from the field after starting out the season with several cold shooting games.

Hurley (5-0, 4-0) hosts Lac Courte Oreilles Friday night.

“Very impressed with the girls five games in,” Aijala said.

Hurley — Allee Bigboy 3, Courtney Corullo 6, Haley Nyquist 6, Jaana Aukee 2, Kylee Asunto 2, Kylee Hewitt 8, Olivia France 14, Aly Kukowski 9, Nicole DiGiorgio 6, Melissa DiGiorgio 14, Darian Bender 5, Sydney Saari 4, Kamin Swartz 4. FTs: 5-

Samsons win home matinee

By JASON JUNO
sports@yourdailyglobe.com

IRONWOOD — The GCC Samsons won Tuesday’s matinee game 109-51 over the Finlandia University JV team.

Finlandia has a full slate of 25 games, so Finlandia took the players who haven’t played the entire schedule of games. The Samsons have fared well against their full team in the past, but they didn’t get that chance Tuesday.

“I’d prefer to play their varsity team,” GCC coach Dennis Mackey said. “I’m not apologizing for my guys’ play. I thought we played hard, we’re going to play hard. Obviously I went with some different combinations and the bench players got to play a lot more, which is nice and rewarding for them. It was just a good effort.”

GCC led 48-20 at the half and had an even bigger second half to more than double up Finlandia.

Marlen Williams led six Samsons in double figures with 18 points. Donald Davis III scored 17, Cole Bracket had 14, Christian Hocking and Yohance London both had 11 and Isiah Thompson had 10.

“I liked what guys did, even guys that haven’t played a lot, that got the opportunity today,” Mackey said. “They played positive, moved the ball, shared the ball, played the right way and kept competing right to the end, which is what we have to do. No matter who we play, we still have to compete. When you have a home game, you want to take care of business, which is what we did today.”

While 11 players scored for the Samsons, their third-leading scorer coming into the game, Trevon Clark, went scoreless.

“I told him when we made our run to take total control of the game, he had been on the bench, he came back in the game and he played about a six-minute span where he never took a shot. When he came back out, I told him, ‘You took over the game without taking a shot, that’s the way to play basketball,’” Mackey said. “Because what happened was his defense, he knocked some balls loose, he got some rebounds, had 2-3 assists during that span and played the right way, very unselfishly, didn’t take any shots, set other guys up.”

“And that’s what this team has done all year and that’s why we’re competitive pretty much every night.”

He thought the guys off the bench played well.

“Cole Bracket had another great effort. I thought Donny Davis scored 17 points, was a force on the boards and did a good job passing the ball on the inside,” Mackey said. “Isiah off the bench had 10. Adam Libertoski, eight points, five rebounds and just did his job. That is why we’re successful right now is that we’re learning roles and we’re doing our jobs when we go into games. Sometimes the job isn’t always to Outdated tradition?

Dear Annie

Dear Annie: I am a baby boomer and appreciate the 20th-century tradition of “rising to the occasion” and taking in meals if a family member is ill or if there has been a death in the family. It is a kind and thoughtful gesture. I am in a club, and one member’s husband was diagnosed with cancer two years ago. At that time, our president assigned each member a time to take a meal to them, staggered by a few days. Our president requested that we share the menu with other club members so there wouldn’t be duplicated meals. The member’s husband recently died, and our president has again requested that we take food to the house. And we are stepping up to the plate and doing so.

This member is financially very well-off. Her husband retired from a career in government, and his retirement income was well over six figures annually. She is a successful Realtor. In 21st-century America, supermarkets have deli departments, and restaurants have takeout options. Home delivery of food is available. I agree that taking food to folks in these circumstances is a kind and gracious act, but I’m wondering whether that’s still what etiquette dictates. — Wondering

Dear Wondering: Sure, it’s easier than ever to have food delivered. But the gesture of bringing meals to the grieving or sick has never really been about making things more convenient for them (though that’s part of it). It’s about community. It’s about showing someone going through a hard time that he or she has the support of friends and neighbors. So I’d encourage you to do whatever you can. If you find you don’t have time to cook, then picking up takeout is just fine, too. It’s your stopping by that counts.

Dear Annie: As a survivor of abuse, I would like to share some things with “Ostracized,” whose adult children seem to have chosen their dad’s side despite his abusive behavior toward her: You are doing more for your children than you know. Leaving a toxic marriage teaches them how to stand up for themselves. Staying centered, calm and confident teaches them things that money won’t buy. They have their own lessons to learn, and added demands will only continue this churning. Snail-mail letters are powerful because they can come back to them time and time again. You are their mom, and his money and control won’t change that. I know it’s hard (I have been there), but new family dynamics call for new traditions. Anything you can do to make things easier for the kids will help them more than you know (and I’ve been the kid, too!). They will figure all of this out. It may take some time, but you will heal and show them that a happy life doesn’t depend on money. Be gentle with yourself. — A Happy Survivor

Dear Happy Survivor: Thank you for your beautiful letter. I’m printing it to provide encouragement to “Ostracized” and anyone else who has left an abusive partner.

Send your questions for Annie Lane to dearannie@creators.com.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Jump in, participate and get things done. Tidy up, decorate your space, get into the festive spirit and do something that brings you joy. Home improvement, romance and personal growth are favored.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) — Control your emotions when dealing with a friend, relative or loved one. If you overreact, take on more than you can handle or make an unpopular change, you will face the consequences.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March

20) — Touch base with someone who inspires you. Discussions will prompt you to seek out people working to achieve similar goals. Sharing ideas will save time and energy and encourage success.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Say little and do a lot. Focus on your responsibilities and do the best job possible. Keep your spending to a minimum, and you’ll feel less stressed about the future. Be careful of your health.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Refuse to let your emotions lead you down the wrong path. An offer will give you something to think about. Don’t lose sight of your dreams due to a lack of support. Speak up and forge ahead.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — You have more opportunities than you think. Check out possibilities and take advantage of a situation that can help you excel. Mingle, network and look for ways to stabilize your future. Let go of the past.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — A proposal will grab your attention. Don’t dance around the subject or be quick to react, or you may hurt someone’s feelings. Honesty will save you from unnecessary distress.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Take things up a notch. Keep moving until you are satisfied with the results. Last-minute shopping, festive events and taking care of year-end paperwork should be priorities.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Don’t get all worked up over something inconsequential. Emotions will run high when friends, family or colleagues get together. Simplify matters by maintaining equality and avoiding indulgence.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) — Take good care of your health, home and family. Try to get everything done. Get in high gear and focus on what makes the most sense. Preparation is critical when it comes to pleasing others.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) — Emotions will change quickly regarding situations that require cooperation. Find a way to compromise before things go haywire. Use your intelligence by making an offer that’s hard to refuse.

Ask The Doctors

by Elizabeth Ko, M.D. & Eve Glazier, M.D.

KETOSIS, KETOACIDOSIS SOUND SIMILAR, BUT NOT THE SAME THING

Dear Doctors: I mentioned to a friend that I'm starting a low-carb diet that puts your body into ketosis. She said not to because ketosis is one of the dangerous complications that can happen to people with diabetes. Is that right? If so, how can low-carb diets ever be safe?

Dear Reader: Your friend made a fairly common mistake. She has confused ketosis, which is a shift in how the body uses energy when carbohydrates are not available, with ketoacidosis, which is a serious complication of Type 1 diabetes.

The names are similar because both involve chemicals known as ketones. These are an alternative fuel source that the liver makes from stored fat. This occurs when glucose, which is derived from carbohydrates and is the body's go-to source of energy, is in short supply. However, ketosis and ketoacidosis are not the same thing. Unlike ketosis, which is generally safe, ketoacidosis is a grave and life-threatening condition. Also known as diabetic ketoacidosis, it occurs in people living with Type 1 diabetes when their insulin levels become too low. This results in a buildup of ketones in the bloodstream, which causes the blood to become dangerously acidic. The condition is usually triggered by hormone imbalances that result from certain types of illness, or by a problem with insulin therapy. Diabetic ketoacidosis is a medical emergency. Without immediate care, it can lead to death. Although it is seen most often in people living with Type 1 diabetes, under certain conditions, it is possible for it to occur in someone with Type 2 diabetes as well.

For those who don't have diabetes, are in good health and are not pregnant, ketosis can be a safe and effective way to help with weight loss. It's a metabolic state that is achieved by strictly limiting the amount of carbohydrates in the diet. Without carbohydrates to process into glucose for fuel, the body switches to burning stored fat for energy instead. It takes three to four days of eating 50 grams or fewer of carbohydrates to nudge the body into ketosis. People who follow low-carb weight-loss plans that keep the body in ketosis report a reduction in appetite and, eventually, in cravings for sweets. This type of eating also results in rapid weight loss, particularly at the start, as excess water leaves the body. Without carbs in the diet, blood sugar control tends to improve, as do blood lipid levels. Another potential benefit is that initial fat loss tends to come from the abdominal cavity. However, there are challenges as well. Among these is keeping the body in ketosis while still getting enough fresh fruit, vegetables and leafy greens for a healthful diet. Fifty grams of carbs per day go quickly. There is also some evidence that, over the long term, this type of restrictive diet can have an adverse effect on the health and diversity of the all-important gut microbiome.

If you're still interested in following this type of diet, we suggest that you seek guidance from your health care provider or a registered dietitian.

STAY MENTALLY AND PHYSICALLY HEALTHY THIS HOLIDAY SEASON!

Holiday season can be full of joy, but also full of stress for some. Here are some tips for stress-free holidays, even during a pandemic:

- Stay safe: Be prepared for harsh weather conditions. Be aware of potential fire hazards and safety hazards for young children and pets. Stay up-to-date with COVID-19 news, rules, and regulations for your local area (visit <https://www.michigan.gov/coronavirus>).
- Be realistic: Set a gift shopping budget and stick to it. Manage your expectations. Offer positive resolutions to conflict.
- Take time to be selfish: Practice self-care. Buy gifts for yourself. Set aside specific time for rest and relaxation. Arrange a favorite holiday activity to do with members of your household. Keep up on regular exercise, adequate sleep, and healthy eating habits.

Wishing you a relaxing and stress-free Holiday Season!

I have been trying to be good most of the time, but sometimes a get a little naughty. I am helpful to my dad like doing the dishes. This year for Christmas I would like hot wheels. Pokemon cards, lego sets, RC car, FNAF plushies and stuffed animals. Play-do, slime, fidget toys, and Mine Craft toys. Have a Merry Christmas. Your Friend,

Gibson Schulze

I di help my mom put up the Christmas tree. This year for Christmas I would like an RC truck, Play station 5 or Xbox or Nintendo switch. A snowmobile, dirt bike, and dirt bike games, four wheeler, lego sets and a real turtle with a tank. I will eave you Oreos and milk. Your Friend,
